His answer is thus very interesting and really gives a different and unique but also highly valuable perspective. Spotted among the green like a gigantic bouquet were clusters of fields each of a different color, one a mass of bright orange, another deep blue, whites, reds—fields of blooming flowers, bushes, and evidently hybrids of the two, because no flower could be that large.

Perhaps it served to reinforce her belief that she was dealing with space visitors. In ancient Ireland, an apple tree was one of only three objects that could be paid for with living things; the other two were the hazel bush and the sacred grove. But he, Leary, was no longer human, he said. Jesus Christ! He felt really strange.
