What an amazing story. The scenario depicted in Revelation 9 is the same scenario depicted in Job, the only difference being, the scale is global -- not just a single man in a small town in the ancient east, but the entire human race dwelling upon the face of the entire planet. I enjoyed watching their characters get to know each other and to see how their relationship would grow in the book.

I loved how she created her home scenario to explain some of the unknown at the time. The last of the constellations which may belong to the Viking Age is FriggjarrokkrFrigga's Distaff, the three bright stars that make up the belt of the constellation we know today as Orion the Hunter. The author does such a good job with the emotions in the story, and her descriptions painted such a vivid picture of the people and places she encounters. The first time I wished on a shooting star, I was probably . Vmarked it as to-read Shelves: freebies. The conviction in the king's voice frightened Davos to the core.
