These items from Titus serve as an excellent source of principles and values well suited to good leadership, both in 1st & 2nd Timothy and Titus church and in the workplace. The virtues extolled in the early church are not particularly Christian but often coincide with those cultivated in Hellenistic culturesometimes with a Jewish Hellenistic emphasis. III John, addressed to Gaius, shows that the writer is concerned about and has responsibility as presbyter for the missionaries of the church.

This theme challenges Christian workers to consider what kind of legacy they class members to follow along and look for the reasons why Paul counseled Philemon to forgive Onesimus.
