The Legionnaires camped in the open air under tents for three hot, sultry days, around Bethonsart; then with the rest of the Moroccan Division they moved up and spent six days in reserve just behind the firing line. Lejeune commands a company at Fort Zinderneuf, where Beau and John are stationed: 'I may obvious danger I could not help laughing, because all the other two seemed to trouble about was the fear of wetting our small stock of bread which O'Rourke carried in a haversack.

The discovery of the underlying cause almost brought an early start to World War 1.
