Endoscopy The most accurate way of confirming a peptic ulcer is by endoscopy. These include: vomiting blood - the blood can appear bright red, or have a darker, grainy appearance similar to coffee granules, passing stools faeces - which are very dark in colour or 'tar-like', and a sudden, sharp pain in your abdomen stomach that gets steadily worse. Apply ice or something cold to your canker sore.

However there are a number of things you could do or try if you are a regular sufferer. Diagnostic testing for peptic ulcer disease has two distinct goals: . Oral complications. Omeprazole Prilosec 20 mg two times daily or lansoprazole Prevacid 30 mg two times daily plus amoxicillin 1 g two times daily or metronidazole Flagyl mg two times daily if allergic to penicillin.
