But in Johnson we see our own magnified and glorified selves.
So once, when he dined at Bowood with Lord Shelburne he refused to repeat a story at the request of his host, saying that he would not be dragged in as story-teller to the company. You can find our Community Guidelines in full. Go to Bookshelf. It was felt at once, and has been increasingly felt ever since, that Boswell is so direct and personal that beside him all other biographers seem impersonal and vague, that he is so intimate that he makes all others appear cold and distant, so lifelike that they seem shadowy, so true that they seem false. Appreciations and Cr.
He could not cling to it to the end, he could not victoriously live by it and make
